Protesters Talk Back to Authoritarianism

By Sasha Senal

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

On Sept. 20, as the North Country Fair in Arcata was bringing folks from all walks of life together in celebration, another type of assembly was taking place in front of the Humboldt County Courthouse. There, dozens of North Coast neighbors took to the street to protest the current administration amid a host of other issues, including attacks on free speech, ICE raids and encroaching authoritarianism.

Among those gathered was Janie, who says she was born in the '50s and never protested until recently "I am disgusted," she said. She was not alone.

The planned Women's March coincided with Humboldt's iteration of the Make Billionaires Pay protest taking place on the same day in New York City, where the event joined Climate Week initiatives. Protests also came on the heels of recent political fuel like the government backlash on comments following the killing of far-right commentator Charlie Kirk and the suspension of a talk-show host Jimmy Kimmel for his opinions. Though the numbers on Fifth Street in Eureka did not parallel that of the NYC protest, the attendees were standing up for the same issues.

"I'm here because I love my country," said K.T., a local protest organizer. Calling Trump a "fascist pig," she said there were so many reasons to be out on this day. She was not alone in her sentiments about the sitting president.

One Vietnam veteran said that in his opinion, Trump should be "ripped from the presidency as soon as possible."

But the crowd wasn't just focused on strictly conservative politicians.

As one man, clad in a keffiyeh and holding a sign painted with the Palestinian flag put it, "We're getting to the point of no free speech and oligarchy, and if we don't wake up soon, it will be too late." He continued by calling out the Democratic party, stressing that it needs to "stop coddling corporations and get back to the people."

Some people were simply concerned more squarely about the well-being of all.

Charlotte, who has been a protester since the '60s, teared up saying, "I just want a chance for us to survive."

The tone was markedly different from what might be expected of a crowd angry at their government. The protestors, composed mostly of Baby Boomers and Gen Xers, were steadfast in their presence on that street corner while simultaneously retaining a genial, communal spirit.

Though the crowd didn't sing or entertain catchy chants, their signs and flags, most of which were homemade, bore slogans like, "When Injustice Becomes Law, Resistance Becomes Duty," and "Last Century We Killed Fascists, This Century We Elect Them." Still, it was clear some demographics were missing from the picture. Joanie agreed. "Where's everyone who's 20 to 30 to 40?" she said, pointing to Gen Z as the beacon of the movement's future.

Black Lives Matter banner in hand, retired minister Tom Lewis was there with other members of the Humboldt Unitarian Universalist Fellowship. For him, protest is a matter of his faith calling him to justice. "Democracy asks us to push back when something is not working." Despite what the crowd banded together against that day, Lewis says he has faith that we will survive. With a smile he continued, "But I'm not gonna sit back." ●

Justice in Humboldt: A Life-Saving Precedent in the Making

views@northcoastjournal.com

At 18 weeks pregnant, Tame-sha Means' water broke, an event that generally results in a stillbirth or the baby's death. Means lived in a rural area, much like Humboldt, where she had access to one hospital: Mercy Health, a Catholic institution. The hospital sent Means home without treatment, despite her dangerous condition. Means had already suffered a painful bacterial infection that her physicians ignored, and later, her baby died during delivery. Without her knowledge, as a Catholic institution, Mercy Health had complied with strict religious regulations that prohibit abortions.

Means filed a suit against the United Conference of Catholic Bishops (UCCB), the entity responsible for the pro-life directives that prevented her from receiving the care she needed. The case was ultimately dismissed, repeating a well-known pattern where courts refuse to intervene with religious institutions due to separation of church and state — leaving patients to pay the price.

Up until last year, this hands-off approach has prevailed: Don't regulate theology or religious practice in employment, medicine, education, etc. That is, until Anna Nusslock, a chiropractor from Eureka received similar treatment to Means from Providence St. Joseph Hospital. Straying notably from legal precedent, Attorney General Rob Bonta filed a suit against the hospital, claiming that it violated the California Emergency Services Law. For the first time, a state attorney general pursued legal action against a hospital for denying emergency abortion care under state law. In our regressive post-Dobbs era, in which 22 states have banned or heavily restricted abortion, Bonta's actions represent a rare move in the opposite direction — one that could be a huge win for historically pro-choice California and maybe the country.

Catholic hospitals claim their adherence to the UCCB's Ethical and Religious Directives for Catholic Healthcare Services protect their values. But when one in seven hospital beds in America is Catholic, these regulations quietly and dangerously dictate care for millions of patients. Only 28 percent of Catholic hospitals explicitly explain how faith influences treatment. This results in women like Means and Nusslock entering Catholic hospitals unaware of what care they can or cannot receive. Religion has no place tying the hands of trained medical professionals — especially in emergencies where hesitation and uncertainty can be fatal. Nusslock's case and the hundreds that have come before it are a glaring sign that religion should never have a regulatory hand in medicine unless it is the choice of the patient.

Now the courts face a pivotal question: Do religious hospitals get to deny emergency abortions, or must they follow the same laws as everyone else? However, the age-old issue is that compelling Catholic hospitals to act against their beliefs is unprecedented and constitutionally questionable per the First Amendment and the Establishment Clause. Even now, Providence claims it complies with both the federal Emergency Medical Treatment and Labor Act (EMTALA) and California emergency care laws when fetal death is likely. Still, the ruling on this case could finally bring legal clarity to the ongoing conflict between religious doctrine and state medical obligations. A ruling for Providence would cement a dangerous precedent for letting institutions deny care under the guise of faith.

But if Bonta wins, every Catholic hospital in California would be required to provide emergency abortion care. And because many other states have similar emergency medical laws, a win for the attorney general could spark a national shift in the humane direction — establishing an emergency abortion access precedent despite federal tendencies to limit it.

While the New York Times, PBS, and the California Department of Justice may only recognize Humboldt as the county where a hemorrhaging, pregnant woman was given buckets and towels by a hospital "in case something happened in the car," it is also the birthplace of an undeniably significant case that could carry landmark-level influence in the world of religion and medicine. A state win in this case would also serve as a beacon of liberal progress despite an administration that has attempted to gut not only healthcare, but freedom for millions.

To me, the thought that this case violates freedom of religion is irrational. What is freedom of religion if it allows institutions to withhold care that could save lives? As Providence's lawyers stated before, the biggest obstacle Bonta faces is that the foundation of this case is unprecedented. But all the most revolutionary cases were, until someone took them to court. ●

We, the undersigned, are medical providers in Humboldt County invested in the care of pregnant people in our community. We want to share a message directly from us regarding the hearing held on Aug. 29, 2025 where Providence Health and Services called into question their duty to follow the California Emergency Services Law (ESL). This law guarantees care for those with a medical complication in pregnancy that results in the pregnancy no longer being able to continue.

Providence legal counsel proposed several unsafe practices during this hearing, including requiring physicians to consult an ethics board prior to providing standard medical care, delaying care until a patient is critically ill (phrased as “certain death of mother or fetus”), or transferring patients in need of urgent care to another facility more than 100 miles away.

As clinicians, we have an ethical and moral obligation to the health and safety of the pregnant person. We do not support delaying care until someone is in mortal danger or sending people away from a facility that is equipped to provide lifesaving care. We stand firmly committed to providing competent, prompt and compassionate care in these critical moments. Someone experiencing a devastating pregnancy complication should not have to worry about politics or religion affecting their care. The only people who should be involved in decisions about pregnancy complications are a patient and their medical provider.

Furthermore, we recognize the systemic classism, racism and misogyny in statements that suggest that care involving a pregnant uterus can wait. It is a medical standard that someone presenting with a critical heart attack receives immediate care. Someone suffering appendicitis or a gallbladder infection would not be told to “wait and see” if they develop sepsis before being offered antibiotics and surgery. To propose that someone suffering a pregnancy complication should wait until they are sufficiently near death before offering medical care violates our oath, our commitment to our patients and our commitment to ourselves.

Our current local hospital leadership continues to reassure us that we have their support in providing appropriate care to our community. We applaud them for this and expect that this will continue. We request ongoing community support to make sure it does.

Our goal in this message is to provide hope and clarity. The narrative in the courtroom does not reflect the standards that we believe in as your providers. We affirm our commitment to using our knowledge and skill to provide you with high quality, safe and compassionate care. We will not be distracted by outsiders, untrained in medical care, when they propose actions that cause mental and physical harm. We are honored to provide care in vulnerable moments. If a devastating complication does arise, we will be by your side to support you. Many of us have also been pregnant and have birthed our children in this community. This is our home. Our duty is to you. ●

Red-Light Women

The hidden funders of early Eureka, Part 1

By Lynette Mullen

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

D Street between Third and Fourth streets, once home to brothels.

Courtesy of the Lloyd Stine collection of the Humboldt County Historical Society

In the spring of 1876, a bright and determined 17-year-old girl, standing 5 feet 6 inches, with light hair, fair skin and blue eyes, joined an aunt living in Humboldt County. She'd left San Francisco as Catherine Q., and stepped onto the Eureka Wharf as Kittie Warren, marking the beginning of a double life she would continue for more than 30 years. In that time, she ran one of Eureka's many brothels, "houses of ill fame" denounced in public even as they helped sustain the city's vice-driven economy.

Early Humboldt histories often focus on the men who settled and shaped the region, their names preserved on buildings and street signs. But those working in illicit trades also played a significant role. Generations of bootleggers and illegal cannabis growers fueled local commerce, launched businesses and funded civic infrastructure through bribes, fines and unofficial (and eventually legal) taxes. The seldom acknowledged women of the red-light district — sex workers and brothel managers — also left their mark on this community.

Shunned by polite society even as they supported it, women like Warren and those in her employ attracted customers and their money, paid fines that contributed to city revenues and spent freely at local shops. In an era when sex work was illegal but tolerated, they were permitted and sometimes even encouraged to remain. They lived in the shadows, but their impact on Humboldt County and Eureka, in particular, was profound.

Kittie Warren

Born to Irish immigrants in Oakland, Catherine's early life offered little promise. In a time when parents were expected to groom their daughters for marriage and eligible bachelors were discouraged from marrying "downward," Catherine's father spent his days intoxicated and fishing off the local pier while her mother tried and failed to parent the couple's nine children. The older boys became known for drinking and brawling, while the younger three got caught stealing chickens and loaves of bread. Young Catherine's sticky fingers made her infamous as a budding criminal "princess."

Decent employment hinged on good references and respectable family ties — Catherine had neither and could anticipate a life of drudgery, working long hours as a laundress, chambermaid or sweatshop laborer earning starvation wages.

Prostitution, on the other hand, though rife with violence, disease and the risks associated with unwanted pregnancy, provided young women like Catherine enough funds to support themselves and contribute to a struggling family.

Whether her aunt in Humboldt was already in the sex trade is unclear, but Catherine's new name suggests she'd been coached. Most women adopted aliases when they entered the "life" to hide their identities and protect family members from shame by association, even when their families helped push them there.

By 1880, Catherine had secured a small cottage on Second Street in Eureka. That year's census listed Kittie Warren as a "housekeeper" — a euphemism for the city's working women that census worker Louis Tower, who later became a schoolteacher, preferred over "prostitute" (the term used in Sacramento) or "harlot" (as sex workers were labeled in Amador, Mariposa and Siskiyou counties).

Necessary evil

Many in the 19th century believed that men required a regular sexual outlet to prevent uncontrolled eruptions of violence, sometimes referred to as the "volcano theory." Unfortunately for the multitude of single men that flooded early California, self-satisfaction through masturbation was also considered dangerous. Medical authorities warned that "self-abuse" caused impotence and sterility. State hospital physicians sometimes listed masturbation as the sole cause of insanity.

For many, marriage offered little relief. In his book, Criminal Woman, the Prostitute, and the Normal Woman, published in 1893, renowned Italian psychiatrist Cesare Lombroso promoted a common misconception that "normal" women were "naturally and organically monogamous and frigid," forcing many wives to suppress their sexuality or risk being judged as deviant. Prostitutes, on the other hand, Lombroso (and others) believed, had naturally strong libidos and provided a critical safety valve for sexually frustrated single and married men alike. "Public women," prostitute and autobiographer Josie Washburn reflected later, were sacrificed by society "to satisfy men who might otherwise outrage respectable girls and women."

Sadly, early Humboldt County had no shortage of women deemed less respectable to sacrifice. While some arrived happily married and raising families, many in the frontier community were forced to flee alcohol-fueled domestic violence. Young girls were often ostracized by family and society after breaking the taboo against premarital sex, leaving them few options for financial support. Others were driven into prostitution when death or abandonment shattered their lives, plunging them into despair, alcoholism or addiction. Single and widowed women struggling against poverty and limited opportunities turned to prostitution for survival.

The law and contradictions

In December of 1852, San Francisco's Daily Alta California denounced the "miserable and wretched dens of vice and debauchery" multiplying in the city, casting them as criminal incubators. In response, San Francisco lawmakers imposed fines and jail time on convicted brothel owners and their tenants. Other California towns soon followed, but it wasn't until 1855 that the fledgling state passed a broader vagrancy law targeting the unemployed, habitual drunkards and prostitutes. The law allowed local officials to arrest and incarcerate women for up to 90 days and/or subject them to hard labor.

In 1872, amid ongoing public debates over the regulation of sex work, California enacted a revised anti-vagrancy act: Penal Code 647. It reaffirmed that "lewd or dissolute persons" and "common prostitutes" were vagrants, and it supported authorities in arresting, fining and jailing offenders. Framed as a safeguard for public morality, the statute in practice served less to stop prostitution than to dictate where and when it could occur, using the threat of arrest as leverage.

Humboldt County was founded in the 1850s by settlers seeking a coastal route to the inland gold mines. By the time Catherine Q. arrived in the 1870s, Eureka had evolved from a rough frontier outpost to a major trading hub and the largest city on the West Coast between San Francisco and Portland. Steamers lined the docks, delivered machinery, factory-sewn clothing, sugar and more. They left carrying lumber, shingles, salmon, potatoes, sheep and other goods to distribute up and down the coast, and as far as Australia.

Labor was in high demand, and millworkers, craftsmen, loggers, sailors and other transient workers poured in from across the country and around the world. They rented rooms and patronized restaurants. They bought boots and shirts, tools and provisions. But many were also single, far from home and too ill-paid and unprepared to marry. Eureka, like many early California communities, adopted a pragmatic stance toward what many considered a necessary evil and sought to regulate, rather than eradicate, prostitution. After all, sex workers attracted men whose paychecks circulated through saloons, general stores and gambling dens. Brothel keepers paid outrageous rents for ramshackle properties, and the fines imposed when they were arrested helped fund the city's police, city services and infrastructure.

While vice was generally tolerated, not all Eurekans and respectable visitors wanted to see it. As the city developed, "rookeries" were pushed southwest and away from the busy F Street wharf and the heart of Old Town. The substantial and attractive commercial buildings that took their places, such as the Vance Hotel, the Palmtag Building (now home to Many Hands Gallery) and the Ricks Building, which houses Old Town Coffee and Chocolates, can still be seen today. Moving southwest, a few of the shorter, squatter, less substantial historic structures, like the one now housing the Shanty, remain.

By 1876, Eureka boasted a population of 6,000, hosted 41 licensed liquor establishments and multiple brothels, but the city employed just two police officers. Ostensibly to protect its citizens from public debauchery, officials enacted Ordinance 28, "for suppression of vice and immorality in the city of Eureka." The ordinance empowered local courts to fine convicted prostitutes and brothel owners up to $100 or sentence them to up to 10 days in jail. Shortly thereafter, 1878's Ordinance 54 barred women from entering saloons between 8

The Callaghans' Legacy of Brothels

In 1881, Bartholomew Callaghan gifted ownership of his property on the northwest corner of Fourth and B streets to his first wife, Catherine, "out of love and affection." When she died and he remarried, he repeated the gesture with his second wife, Mary.

Before Mary died from complications due to childbirth in 1898, she deeded the B Street property, by then filled with brothels, to her children "in consideration of love and affection ... for their support and livelihood," making her newborn son and 3-year-old daughter the youngest brothel owners in Eureka — and perhaps anywhere. Callaghan managed the properties on behalf of his children and every year reported to the county a $25 monthly income taken from rents in support of their care (though in reality he likely took much more). The children maintained ownership until the 1920s.

p.m. and 6 a.m., curtailing public solicitation and forcing prostitutes into dedicated brothels where they would be hidden from "decent" citizens, but easily accessible to clients seeking their services. The arrangement must have been frustrating for the women, but it could have been worse.

Regulation, not elimination (1880-1900)

By the 1880s, San Francisco's vice districts were well segregated. A few more fortunate women worked in lavish parlor houses or paid bribes to operate discreetly from boarding houses and hotels. But most were consigned to the city's notoriously violent red-light district called the Barbary Coast, or confined to miserable "cribs" lining alleys like Morton Street. The San Francisco Call newspaper described these as tiny, airless rooms, sometimes underground, that were "alive with cockroaches and saturated with feculent matter," unfit for human habitation. As gold deposits dwindled, isolated mining towns offered little opportunity. Eureka, by contrast, with its busy port and constant influx of working men, held relative promise for sex workers.

Prostitution was illegal by state and local statute, but local officials seldom closed entire operations. Eureka brothel keepers like Jack Conar ran their enterprises fearlessly — for good reason. In 1880, Conar paid a $75 fine for operating a "house of ill fame," as they were sometimes called. It was a pittance compared to his profits, so he stayed open and expanded. In 1883, he built a full saloon, dance house and brothel on the waterfront at the corner of First and C streets (the site, and possibly the same building, that's now home to the 707 Bar). Though Conar was charged in 1885 for keeping his dance house open after midnight, authorities ignored his brothel upstairs.

Eureka and the state of California's ambivalence toward prostitution was also reflected in the stark disparities in sentencing. In the summer of 1886, convicted brothel owner Jim Ferris faced a $350 fine or the same number of days in the local jail. After spending a brief time in custody, Ferris paid the balance owed and returned to business. When he was charged for the same offense in February of 1887, his fine was reduced to $100 in exchange for a promise to leave the trade for good, while his wife paid another $25. Ferris argued that even the reduced sentence was unfairly harsh for Eureka, claiming in a letter he wrote that spring to the Arcata Union that six similarly involved property owners had gotten better treatment.

He may have been right. As a heavy drinker who had spent time in San Quentin for attempted murder, Ferris may have lacked the finesse and connections needed to appease officials. Joseph Mattson was convicted of operating a brothel on First Street two months after Ferris and fined only $50. On the other hand, Chris Welden, a Humboldt County man addicted to opium, received two years in San Quentin for stealing and pawning a gold watch that same year.

NCJ ON THE COVER

During this time, the city's prostitutes were generally left alone unless they disturbed the peace or their soliciting became too blatant. "Worthless scamps," however, were often targeted. In 1881, officials grew tired of Alfred Olney living off a local prostitute and fined him $25 for vagrancy (likely paid by the poor woman he pimped). Undeterred, Olney faced the same charge again in 1883 and, despite prolonged unemployment, came to court well-dressed, sporting flashy jewelry and a "bowery mustache." Officials hoped his conviction would drive off others in the same non-occupation. It didn't, likely because Eureka's casual approach remained: Vice was tolerated as long as you were Caucasian and remained off the city's main thoroughfares.

Eureka's Chinatown and Lower District

Despite widespread awareness that they were trafficked and held against their will, white Eurekaans also directed hostility toward Chinese prostitutes. By 1885, local editorials called on city officials to "wipe out the plague spots," referring exclusively to Chinese brothels and opium dens ("Opium Dens and 'Morphine Fiends,'" June 16, 2022). Maybe not so coincidentally, Eureka citizens used the accidental shooting of city councilman David Kendall that same year, attributed to a stray bullet shot during a conflict between Chinese tongs or gangs, as an excuse to expel the vast majority of Eureka's Chinese residents overnight under threat of hanging — shuttering their brothels and opium dens ("Heading for Charlie Moon Way," Nov. 7, 2021).

Eureka's de facto red-light district located just blocks away along Third Street, between C and D streets, kept operating. The street was a magnet for sailors, loggers, addicts, petty criminals and working men looking for a drink and paid sex. Anchored by saloons on the eastern corners and H.L. Lockhart's "restaurant," a dance house and brothel on the south center of the block (across the

Health Risks

Prostitution was a dangerous vocation. Beyond the threat of violence, women were frequently exposed to venereal diseases like gonorrhea, which often led to pelvic inflammatory disease, chronic pain and permanent infertility. Syphilis, less common but far more devastating, could cause paralysis, dementia, blindness and early death.

Not that sex within marriage offered absolute protection. Many single and married men frequented vice districts and carried diseases home to innocent spouses. A 1913 Philadelphia vice report found that gonorrhea was "ultimately responsible for 75 percent of all sterility in married life." Infants exposed during childbirth often suffered blindness, meningitis and other complications.

Women were also challenged in preventing unwanted pregnancies. Some used harsh douches made with soapy water, vinegar or even carbolic acid as questionably effective birth control. Others may have used condoms — long made from sheep intestines and, by the mid-19th century, from rubber. In Eureka, however, such items were likely scarce and resisted by customers in the red-light district.

Pregnant prostitutes often sought abortions — dangerous procedures even under the best conditions. Criminalization only heightened the risk by driving the practice underground, where unqualified practitioners charged exorbitant sums and often botched the procedure. Many women died needlessly when complications arose, as fear of incarceration kept them and their providers from seeking medical care. Nineteen-year-old Stella Howard, a Eureka prostitute, died two weeks after an "operation," likely caused by complications after an abortion. Many others went to San Francisco for the procedure — but many were no safer there ("Humboldt's Grisly History of Illegal Abortions," Jan. 23, 2022).

street and east of where the Shanty is now), there were at least six dedicated brothels on the block. The area was known for drunken melees, random shootings and violent assaults on the district's working women by customers and pimps. And it thrived.

Kittie Warren's quiet corner

Warren didn't want violence, or a pimp, or a landlord to appease. She wanted independence and the ability to choose her clientele. She saved her money and in 1887 purchased a house (one of the few old brothel properties still standing) at 129 Third St., a significant and rare accomplishment. She had built enough trust that owner Phillip Needs (also builder of the Needs Building at the corner of Third and E streets) provided her with a $2,000 mortgage, which was double the county assessor's value, but may have included funds for furniture. Women like Warren were often overcharged, but she was also buying stability, or so she thought.

The 11 o'clock ordinance

In an attempt to temper the city's rowdier element, in January of 1888, Eureka enacted Ordinance 114, known as "the 11 o'clock ordinance.” It required all saloons to stop serving alcohol at 11 p.m. and threatened violators with fines of $25 to $500 and up to 10 days in jail. Saloon operators complained that when they complied and closed shop, customers headed to nearby brothels and continued drinking, while bars lost money.

In response, Eureka officials secretly hired the Harry Morse Detective Agency of San Francisco, and two of its undercover agents spent approximately two weeks drinking alcohol in the city’s brothels. Officials then used evidence outlined in their report to arrest 10 female brothel keepers for selling liquor without a license. (No records have been found to indicate any woman was granted a liquor license in Eureka in the 19th century.)

Most pleaded not guilty, forfeited their bail and fled on the next steamer to San Francisco. One pleaded guilty and paid a $75 fine. Warren demanded a trial. Though detectives testified they enjoyed whiskey and observed ongoing liquor sales to a consistently full house six times in Warren’s establishment, the first jury deadlocked on a verdict. A second trial found her guilty, but the fine was minimal in the scope of her operation, and she stayed put.

The city, on the other hand, did not get off so easily. Eureka paid $676.05 for the sting operation, roughly $22,000 in today’s dollars, and would not systematically target brothel keepers for another 12 years.

Property and profits

In the 1850s, William Duff briefly joined his brothers in Humboldt County and amassed significant property in Eureka. After his death, his wife Julia and her second husband (another William Duff, improbable as it sounds) held onto these properties, even as the dwellings became brothels.

And why not? As one Chicago property owner confessed to Pall Mall Gazette editor William Stead in 1894, brothel keepers often paid double the market rate for substandard accommodations. And, as a 1913 Portland, Oregon, vice report pointed out, women of the demi-monde made ideal tenants, posing few demands while consistently paying high rents up front.

William Duff (Julia’s second husband) managed the Eureka properties from the family home in Alameda County and collected rental income that supported daughter Agnes Duff’s position in Berkeley’s “exclusive society set,” as well as Julia’s passion for collecting “rare and artistic” art, furnishings and more. (This continued even in later years, when Agnes and Julia were prosecuted under the city’s red-light abatement act for owning brothel properties and the family refused to let go of its holdings.)

Callaghan followed a similar path. Acquiring Eureka property early on, he, his wife and eventually his children held on to the quarter block at the northwestern corner of Fourth and B streets as marshland gave way to rough framed dwellings. For years, the area went without a proper sewer system. Residents threw slop in the streets and cesspools festered. When the city installed gaslights throughout much of downtown, the B Street neighborhood stayed dark.

These abysmal conditions attracted only the most desperate tenants and, by 1884, brothels were firmly entrenched in the “Lower B,” which carried a well-earned reputation for violence and despair. That year, 22-year-old prostitute Della Downing swallowed carbolic acid to end her life. In 1880 Census record that includes Jack Connors and his "sailors home" and brothel, as well as "housekeeper" Kittie Warren.

1888, a customer shot pimp Peter Peartree after he threatened to kill brothel keeper Gussie Meyers, a woman Peartree had brutally beaten for years. Other women, like "drunken" May Winters and Emma Way, endured chronic abuse at the hands of brutal customers and pimps. While Lockhart's brothel on Third Street housed two African American women in 1888, B Street was generally where the district's women of color lived. For the most part, officials left its inhabitants and customers to their own devices.

In the early 1890s, while nearby communities like Ferndale actively expelled sex workers, Eureka maintained a laissez faire attitude, likely influenced by the national depression of 1893, when lumber demand plummeted, mills scaled back, and fewer steamers and sailors came through the port. Anything that brought men and their money into town must have been welcome. That continued even after the economy recovered. As the 20th century approached, more dwellings became "houses of ill repute." By 1900, at least 11 dedicated brothels were established on Fourth Street between A and C streets, with more scattered throughout the area.

The city's approach remained pragmatic. Fifth Street was the city's primary thoroughfare. "Lewd women" were one block over but a world away, where only men seeking prostitutes would see them. While there were occasional arrests, usually for vagrancy when public disturbances became too blatant, brothel keepers and their occupants were usually left alone. At times, they even received grudging sympathy. In the fall of 1899, after a local girl known professionally as Pearl Moreland shot notoriously violent pimp Alex Watson in the leg to stop his assault, the Humboldt Standard complained only about her bad aim. A local sign painter passing by inadvertently caught one of Moreland's stray bullets in his leg but declined to prosecute.

Catherine Q. and Kittie Warren

Throughout the 1890s, Catherine maintained a double life as Kittie Warren, traveling between her family in Oakland and her brothel in Eureka. She seems to have managed both worlds with composure, except for a brief period in the mid-1890s, when the lines between the two blurred and almost broke. In January of 1895, Bay Area newspapers reported that Catherine Q. was found nude and incoherent on the roof of an Oakland brothel. Journalists suggested the seemingly innocent young woman had been drugged and taken there against her will, suspecting no connection to her work in Eureka's red-light district. Catherine spent a short time at St. Agnew's asylum before returning to Eureka as Kittie Warren, where she remained for another 13 years.

During that time, Warren witnessed a new level of contradiction in Eureka. In the early 1900s, prostitution remained illegal by state law and local ordinance, but the city was broke. Ignoring any moral implications, Eureka allowed the women to pay for regular trader's licenses that permitted them to sell cigars and snacks in their brothels and, in 1903, the city launched a system of regular "prosecution" that effectively taxed local madams, giving them tacit permission to operate as long as they continued to pay.

But moral crusaders, politicians and others would soon struggle to control the red-light district, its sex workers and the money they brought in. ●

To be continued next week.

Post-Millennium Tension

By Collin Yeo

setlist@northcoastjournal.com

At a certain point in your life, the corrosion of your memories meets the current of dreams and the two become more or less indistinguishable. Older impressions melt away in the psychic wash, only to reappear as patchwork colors on the uninvited night coat of sleep. After all, the mind has its own efficiencies, too, however mysterious the process might be that cannibalizes the stored fats of experience into newly rendered projections. If we are lucky enough to have a functioning system, we must acknowledge that we are constantly recording the external while producing the internal, and all the while — at the risk of sounding simple — processing the eternal. That is not to say that the mind works solely as a filter between the conscious world and the unconscious pulse of expression, but that is certainly one of its functions. What goes on beyond our private shoals of sleep-armored filter feeders all happens far past the time-bleached reefs of human language, in the impossible submarine depths where the mysteries of prehistory boil against the forge of creation. The spawn-waters of the countless variations of life more alien than the stars and more intimate than the atomic structure of each and every one of our living selves.

This is a rough blueprint of my thoughts last week as I stared at the men's underwear section during one of my super-rare trips to a big box store in Eureka. I was staring because everything was behind a locked case now, a novel situation for me in this particular store, but not new in the flux of my experience. Things fall apart often in this era.

I live very simply, and on this trip, I bought socks, a large box of canned cat food, some razors and a Snoopy hat from the clearance rack. I spent more on the cat food than anything else for reasons regular readers will have no trouble discerning. The few times I go shopping for new clothing, it's strictly for garments covering my intimate parts: feet, crotch and head. Everything else comes secondhand or from the hardware store.

Previous recessions and disasters all left me in the depths of the invisible class I am most familiar with. Not much has changed there, though the harbingers of another one of these looming capitalist "whoopsies" just keep getting dumber and grosser. A good society with competent administrators doesn't have people resorting to stealing necessities. Nor does it have cheap security theater to fire up the hapless dipshits out there stupid enough to blame the decay on the people suffering around them, rather than the audacious perverts who are running things into the ground.

That stuff's not for us, though. We're lucky; our processes function just fine and the re-cut colors of our memories look simply fabulous on the evergreen wardrobe of our dreams. We are all so much more than the humility of our circumstances. Welcome to fall.

Thursday

The Creative Sanctuary presents the latest in an ongoing series honoring the musical alumni of the rotating, midcentury supergroup the Jazz Messengers. Tonight's star attraction is the recently late Wayne Shorter, whose saxophonic splendor lit up the world in a career that spanned from bebop to hip hop and beyond. Join hosts James Zeller, Ramsey Isaacs and company for this special celebration of a truly stellar being. It all goes down at the Arcata Playhouse at 7 p.m., where a $10-$30 sliding scale cover will get you inside.

Friday

Come out to the last Friday Night Market in Arcata — for now — and swing by the Outer Space at 7:30 p.m. for a very special local showcase in the intimate, all-ages, sober joint. We're talking boogying with The Cowtown Sound, Jellyworks playing some instrumental space-synth, and the debut full-band show of both folk punk act Halfwing and The Dynamites. It's only a negotiable $5 to get in the door, so there is little at stake for a lot of fun.

Saturday

Because things get quiet in the early part of next week, I'm double-stacking tonight's fun as a sayonara to September. First up at the Logger Bar, there's a Drag Loteria at 8 p.m., featuring hosts Val de Flores and Komboujia and with music by Hispanic! at the Disco. The price for participation is $10. Meanwhile, across the Mad River, Redwood Raks Dance Studio is celebrating its on-going Latin Music and Dance Festival with some tunes tonight courtesy of DJ Bongo at 8 p.m., and local cumbia all-stars Makenu at 10. La Barca food truck will be outside all night, and $20 lets you dance the night away.

Sunday

It's the final day of the Camp Rosewater music and camping festival outside of Miranda, where the music will be playing from noon to 8 p.m. Today's bands include the Magnificent Sanctuary Band, Down 'N Dirty, an unplugged set by Rosewater and Blackened Sabbath, a funky Black Sabbath tribute act featuring Norwood Fisher from Fishbone. The entire three-day event costs $100, or $90 if tickets are purchased in advance, and you can get a more thorough breakdown of pricing and location at camprosewater.com.

Monday and Tuesday

Go ahead and skip to Wednesday, the dust from the summer lull is still settling on the early end of the week.

Wednesday

TopHouse is a hybrid band of folk rock, roots and bluegrass music that started a decade ago in Missoula, Montana, before setting up its homebase in Nashville in the year before COVID hit. Since then, the group has extended itself into a quartet and toured and recorded in the fashion of an act working to breakthrough to ever-bigger stages. Tonight's port of call is Humbreus, where New Orleans-based folk and country playing brothers Crowe Boys will be providing opening support. The doors open at 8 p.m., and the tickets will be going for $30, or $5 less if you buy them in advance. ●

Celebrate Latin rhythm and culture at the sixth annual Humboldt Latin Dance and Music Festival, taking place at Redwood Raks and other local venues Sept. 26-28. The festival features more than 20 workshops in salsa, bachata, Cuban styles and more led by internationally recognized, award-winning dance professionals. Each night closes with a high-energy party, complete with DJs and drinks to keep the vibe alive. Drop in for a class ($25) or party ($20), or grab a weekend pass for the full experience at humboldtlatin-dance.com. Whether you're a newbie or a seasoned salsero, this fest is your chance to experience the joy, energy and soul of Latin dance right here in Humboldt.

Thunderous footwork, soaring music and that unmistakable Celtic fire take center stage in A Taste of Ireland - The Irish Music & Dance Sensation, happening Saturday, Sept. 27, at 7:30 p.m. at the Arkley Center for the Performing Arts ($42.14-$76.85 all-in pricing). This internationally acclaimed show features a roster of world-champion dancers performing high-energy choreography set to traditional and modern Irish music. If you've got a soft spot for fiddles and fast feet, this one's calling your name. The craic will be mighty. Get tickets at ATasteofIrelandShow.com.

Trinidad's fourth annual Fisherman's Feast reels in the community with fresh-off-the-boat seafood, live music and sweet tooth temptations on Saturday, Sept. 27, from noon to 5 p.m. at Trinidad Union School ($25, vegetarian options available, $20 advance). Enjoy a local-catch lunch and live music by Kingfoot and Blue Lotus Jazz in the school parking lot. Then mosey across the street to Town Hall for the Dessert Café from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., which will be serving up sweets to fund scholarships. Also check out the Artisan Faire at Town Hall from 11 a.m. until 8:30 p.m., which spills into Trinidad Arts Night, happening from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. (free).

Oysters, albacore and artisan treasures pair perfectly with Fieldbrook's finest wines (and beer) at the Fieldbrook Art & Wine Festival, Saturday, Sept. 27, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Fieldbrook Winery (free entry). Browse artisan booths, bid in the silent auction and relax in the picturesque surroundings listening to live music in a family friendly atmosphere. Proceeds benefit Fieldbrook Elementary through the Fieldbrook Education Foundation.

A Big Bold Beautiful Journey Pays Off

By John J. Bennett
screens@northcoastjournal.com

Everyone left behind after the Rapture looking at all the available housing.
A Big Bold Beautiful Journey

A BIG BOLD BEAUTIFUL JOURNEY. Coming so soon after Splitsville and my rapturous reception thereof, this one might seem like something of a non-starter. It is, after all, high romantic fantasy in a decidedly old-fashioned vein. A meet-cute expanded into a could-be/never-was trip down the varying painful lanes of memory, it plays a little like one of Max Fischer's stage-bound fantasias as re-imagined by someone a little more worldly. On the face of it, the whole thing might seem a little precious, a saccharine creation wedged into the sourness of actual adult existence. And while it is, at least to some extent, it also transcends the trappings and potential traps of modern cinematic fabulism with a care and devotion to its emotional realism that is too frequently absent.

Much of that success is down to director Kogonada (Columbus, 2017; After Yang, 2021) who has been quietly building a catalog of emotionally exploratory, formally elegant movies in a style reflective of cinema history largely unexplored by his contemporaries. After Yang was my first exposure to Kogonada's work, and I was as impressed by its quietly revolutionary evocations of a potential future as by its almost overwhelming humanity and sensitivity. I didn't realize at the time (no excuse) that he rose to prominence as a film scholar, transitioning from a doctorate in film studies to constructing insightful, beautiful visual essays about the works of some of the 20th century's canonized grandmasters to making scripted features of his own. More simply put, he's a lot smarter about the movies than I'll ever be, and he has studied them maybe as closely as anybody.

As such, his scripted work is infused with a knowledge of its influences that allows potentially simplistic, even clichéd scenarios to be elevated into something greater than their premises.

In After Yang, for example, the death of a future-family's robot becomes a study in epistemology and identity, where, handled with only a little less deftness and intelligence, it could have fallen apart into failed, maudlin futurism.

Similarly, A Big Bold Beautiful Journey, written by Seth Reiss (The Menu, 2022) travels along a hair's-breadth tightrope of potentially uncomfortable sentimentality stretched between post-modern romantic comedy and classic Hollywood musical. It is indeed big and bold, painted broadly in primary colors and self-reflective jokes about 1990s America, but it is also firmly grounded in the old-school work of scene study, production design and cinematography.

As the story begins, David (Colin Farrell) is on his way to a wedding. He finds his car ticketed and booted on a city street, but a fortuitous, humble little flyer directs him to the Car Rental Agency, a deeply strange, quasi-magical enterprise operated by a sailor-cursing cashier (Phoebe Waller-Bridge) with a phony German accent and a taciturn mechanic (Kevin Kline) who seem to know more about David than they should.

Despite his misgivings, David rents the 1994 Saturn (the only vehicle on offer) complete with sentient GPS. He makes his way to the wedding, through pouring rain on a brightly sunny day, where he meets Sarah (Margot Robbie). He declines her invitation to dance at the reception, which leads him into a brief but potent shame spiral. On his return trip, his GPS directs him to a travel plaza Burger King, where the two encounter one another again and set off, through a series of magical doors, on an exploration of their individual pasts and conjoined present.

Gradually, as the two uneasily begin to reveal their inner selves, we learn about some of the most formative events in their lives, and about how they have arrived in this moment, as people who are deeply alone but perhaps unable to acknowledge their loneliness.

A Big Bold Beautiful Journey is as grounded in the transition from theater to film as it is in the explosion of Technicolor, a staunchly self-aware throwback as clearly written by a '90s kid as it is directed by a scholar. I can't help but wonder if, in balancing itself between old-school New York-style acting and less old-school adolescent heartbreak and tough-talk, it will find a wide audience, but I hope it can. Because in refusing to bow to the conventions it serves (and was influenced by), it's creating something new, fusing never-before available technology with established technique to advance the language of contemporary cinema and romantic storytelling.

At another (any other?) time in my life it may well have been too sweet by half, but in my dotage, I find it as charming as it is fascinating, a delicate work of craft that examines the intersection of cynicism and optimism with an unjaundiced eye. And it doesn't hurt that Farrell and Robbie are and have been two of the most charming screen actors we've got; watching them get vulnerable with each other, if we can set aside our jadedness, is really something. # Nefertiti, the Second Monotheist

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Her life-sized bust rates a room of its own in the huge museum, sitting on a plinth within a 20-foot-high glass enclosure. Her discoverer, German Egyptologist Ludwig Borchardt, called her “the epitome of tranquility and harmony.” She was found (actually by an Egyptian workman under Borchardt’s supervision) on Dec. 6, 1912, in the ruins of Armana, 300 miles south of Cairo. She was a queen, wife of Pharaoh Akhenaten, ruler of Egypt in the 14th century B.C.

In the past 100-odd years since being unearthed, Nefertiti’s bust has come to symbolize ancient Egypt — she’s everywhere souvenirs are sold there, and her image can be found in every popular book on the country. For good reason: She’s drop-dead gorgeous, from her swan-like neck, high cheekbones, come-hither smile and golden-brown skin. Even her missing left eye speaks of mystery within. Right from when the bust was first publicly exhibited in 1924 at the old Egyptian Museum of Berlin, it “created a sensation, swiftly becoming a world-renowned icon of feminine beauty and one of the most universally recognized artifacts to survive from Ancient Egypt,” according to one historian. Indeed, her name means, “the beautiful one has come.”

What records we have of Nefertiti indicate that she was as powerful as her husband Akhenaten, and after his death in 1362 B.C., she probably ruled in her own right as pharaoh. Tenth ruler of the 18th dynasty (about 1550-1292 B.C.), Akhenaten is a fascinating individual from history, in that he is believed to be the first monotheist in a world in which worship of many gods — polytheism — was the accepted norm. Perhaps in a bid to diminish the power of the bloated priesthood and their numerous gods, Akhenaten promoted the worship of just one deity, Aten, the sun (or sun-disk) god.

As a controversial aside, Aten may have been a model for the later Israelite Yahweh, Nefertiti’s 3,300-year-old limestone bust, colored with gypsum lacquer, was unearthed in 1912 at Armana, Egypt. It’s now in the North Dome Room of Berlin’s Neues Museum.

(aka God). Note, for instance, similarities between Psalm 104 and Akhenaten’s Hymn to Aten, e.g. “How many are your deeds” (Aten) vs. “How manifold are your works” (Yahweh).

To solidify his belief, Akhenaten, previously known as Amenhotep IV, changed his name to mean “Effective for the Aten.” As his wife and perhaps co-ruler, Nefertiti is considered the second monotheist. It was a short-lived triumph for monotheism. Soon after his death, Akhenaten’s statues were destroyed and he was referred to as “that criminal” in archives. In his short life, his successor and Nefertiti’s stepson (or, controversially, son or half-brother) Tutankhamun — “King Tut” — restored polytheism and the priesthood regained power.

The recent history of Nefertiti’s bust is almost as dramatic. It was, um, “appropriated” from Egypt by Borchardt, idolized by Hitler (who refused to return it to Egypt, saying, “I will never relinquish the head of the queen”), hidden in a salt mine during World War II and moved from museum to museum until finding a permanent home in its present location, Berlin’s Neues Museum. Like the Elgin Marbles pilfered from Greece, Nefertiti is a symbol of Egypt’s colonial past, with European authorities refusing to return her to her own country. Nefertiti, meanwhile, appears at ease, serenely untroubled by the controversy swirling around her. ●

HOOPA VALLEY TRIBAL COUNCIL
REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS FOR “TSEWENALDIN INN MANAGEMENT AND OPERATIONAL SERVICES”
The Hoopa Valley Tribe, a sovereign and federally recognized Indian tribe, (“Tribe”) invites responses to this Request for Proposals for “Tsewenaldin Inn Management and Operational Services”.
Proposals must be received no later than 5:00 p.m Pacific Time on Tuesday, September 30, 2025, at the Hoopa Valley Tribe’s Administration Office and be clearly labeled RFP for Tsewenaldin Inn Management and Operational Services.
A. Introduction:
The Hoopa Valley Tribe is seeking proposals from qualified responsive and responsible individuals and/or firms for all management and operational services for the Tsewenaldin Inn.
The Tsewenaldin Inn is a 21 room motel complex located on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation in Northeastern Humboldt County, California and is nestled along the Trinity River, a world-renowned salmon and steelhead fishing stream.
B. Project Description; Scope of Work:
The Tribe invites proposals for general property management services and operational services to include:
• Provide all management and operational services 24 hours per day, 7 days per week, 365 days per year.
• Must provide constant front desk coverage including guest services, taking reservations, check-in and check-out of guests, and providing guests information about local attractions and services.
• Must provide all housekeeping and groundskeeping services.
• Ensure maintenance and upkeep of motel including, maintenance, repair, and refurbishment (where necessary) of all facilities, including the 21 motel rooms. Supervise and directly provide or arrange for general contractors, trade sub-contractors, and other vendors to provide routine maintenance and minor repairs of properties, including arrangement of pest services, janitorial services, security services (as needed), building systems (electrical, mechanical, plumbing, air conditioning, security cameras, locksmiths, and others as needed), upon the final approval by the Hoopa Valley Tribal Council.

• Must provide all accounting services.
• Develop accurate and concise operating and expense budget for the property. (Operating budgets shall include suggested capital improvements and a detailed narrative).
• Maintain accurate records including procedures for reporting monthly financials, inspections, and any other necessary or required documentation.
• Ensure compliance with Hoopa Valley Tribal laws and regulations, and other applicable laws and regulations.
• Identify and address emergency situations immediately and provide follow-up to the Hoopa Valley Tribal Council and/or applicable staff as soon as possible thereafter.
• Facilitate the execution of agreements, amendments, renewals, and cancellations for the Hoopa Valley Tribal Council’s approval.
• Ensure the property is properly maintained, provide safe, decent and sanitary living conditions, perform necessary repairs, and address any guest concerns related to the physical condition of the property.
• Create affirmative marketing plans.

C. Approach:
Qualified Respondents must demonstrate having prior experience with the management and operation of like properties. Respondents must also demonstrate experience managing like properties with multiple guests at one property. Selected Respondents must enter into an agreement with the Hoopa Valley Tribe, by and through the Hoopa Valley Tribal Council, that will specify compensation and outline services to be provided and recommended.
D. Deliverables:
The Tribe is seeking to improve guest retention and achieve repeat business, operational and financial efficiency, transparency and accountability, and overall improvement in the management and operation of the property.
E. Statement of Requirements:
Proposals should describe past work on similar projects, and a recommended approach, schedule and budget to achieve the desired deliverables in relation to the project description.

You have 30 calendar days after this Summons and Petition are served on you to file a Response (form FL-120 or FL-123) at the court and have a copy served on the petitioner. A letter, phone call or court appearance will not protect you.

If you do not file your Response on time, the court may make orders affecting your marriage or domestic partnership, your property, and custody of your children. You may be ordered to pay support and attorney fees and costs.

For legal advice, contact a lawyer immediately.

Get help finding a lawyer at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courts.ca.gov/selfhelp), at the California Legal Services website or by contacting your local county bar association.

NOTICE-RESTRAINING ORDERS ARE ON PAGE 2:

These restraining orders are effective against both spouses or domestic partners until the petition is dismissed, a judgment is entered, or the court makes further orders. They are enforceable anywhere in California by any law enforcement officer who has received or seen a copy of them.

FEE WAIVER: If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the clerk for a fee waiver form. The court may order you to pay back all or part of the fees and costs that the court waived for you or the other party.

The name and address of the court are:

Superior Court of California,
County of Humboldt
825 5th Street
Eureka, CA 95501

The name, address, and telephone number of the petitioner's attorney, or the petitioner without an attorney, are:

Laurence S. Ross, OWENS & Ross
1118 Sixth Street
Eureka, CA 95501
(707) 441-1185

Date: July 3, 2025 clerk, by Carlos Meara Hattan, Deputy
STANDARD FAMILY LAW RESTRAINING ORDERS
Starting immediately, you and your spouse or domestic partner are restrained from:

- Removing the minor children of the parties from the state or applying for a new or replacement passport for those minor children without the prior written consent of the other party or an order of the court;
- Cashing, borrowing against, canceling, transferring, disposing of, or changing the beneficiaries of any insurance or other coverage, including life, health, automobile, and disability, held for the benefit of the parties and their minor children;
- Transferring, encumbering, hypothecating, concealing, or in any way disposing of any way disposing of any property, real or personal, whether community, quasi-community, or separate, without the written consent of the other party or an order of the court, except in the usual course of business or for the necessities of life; and
- Creating a nonprobate transfer or modifying a nonprobate transfer in a manner that affects the disposition of property subject to the transfer, without the written consent of the other party or an order of the court. Before revocation of a nonprobate transfer can take effect or a right of survivorship to property can be eliminated, notice of the change must be filed and served on the other party.

You must notify each other of any proposed extraordinary expenditures at least five business days prior to incurring these extraordinary expenditures and account to the court for all extraordinary expenditures made after these restraining orders are effective. However, you may use community property, quasi-community property, or your own separate property to pay an attorney to help you or to pay court costs.

NOTICE-ACCESS TO AFFORDABLE HEALTH INSURANCE: Do you or someone in your household need affordable health insurance? If so, you should apply for Covered California. Covered California can help reduce the cost you pay towards high quality affordable health care. For more information, visit www.coveredca.com. Or call Covered California at 1-800-300-1506.

WARNING-IMPORTANT INFORMATION California law provides that, for purposes of division of property upon dissolution of a marriage or domestic partnership or upon legal separation, property acquired by the parties during marriage or domestic partnership or upon legal separation, property acquired by the parties during marriage or domestic partnership in joint form is presumed to be community property. If either party to this action should die before the jointly held community property is divided, the language in the deed that characterizes how title is held (i.e., joint tenancy, tenants in common, or community property) will be controlling, and not the community property presumption. You should consult your attorney if you want the community property presumption to be written into the recorded title to the property.

SUMMONS - EVICTION (CITATION JUDICIAL) CASE NUMBER: CV2501481

NOTICE TO Defendant: Markeith Perry (AKA Redd); Does 1 to 10
You are being sued by Plaintiff: Bryce McCurdy

NOTICE! You have been sued. The court may decide against you without your being heard unless you respond within 10 days. You have 10 DAYS, not counting Saturdays and Sundays and other judicial holidays, after this summons and legal papers are served on you to file a written response at this court and have a copy served on the plaintiff.

If this summons was served through the Secretary of State's Safe at Home address confidentiality program, you have 15 days from the date of service, not counting Saturdays and Sundays and other judicial holidays, to respond.

A letter or phone call will not protect you. Your written response must be in proper legal form if you want the court to hear your case. There may be a court form that you can use for your response. You can find these court forms and more information at the Self-Help Guide to California Courts (<https://selfhelp.courts.ca.gov>), your county law library, or the courthouse nearest you. If you do not file your response on time you may lose the case by default, and your wages, money, and property may be taken without further warning from the court.

There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may want to call an attorney referral service. If you cannot afford an attorney, you may be eligible for free legal services from a nonprofit legal services program. You can locate these nonprofit groups at the California Legal Services Web site (www.lawhelpca.org), the Self-Help Guide to the California Courts (<https://selfhelp.courts.ca.gov>) or by contacting your local court or county bar association.

FEE WAIVER: If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the clerk for a fee waiver form. NOTE: The court has a statutory lien for waived fees and costs on any settlement or arbitration award of $10,000 or more in a civil case. The court's lien must be paid before the court will dismiss the case.

The name and address of the court is: Humboldt County Superior Court
825 Fifth Street
Eureka, CA 95501

The name, address, and telephone number of plaintiff's attorney, or plaintiff without an attorney, is:

Bryce McCurdy
2712 T St.
Eureka, CA 95501

ERNEST CLIFTON CLENDENEN

— FOUNDER OF
CLENDENEN CIDER WORKS

Ernest Clifton Clendenen, father of Andrew, grandfather of Clif, and great-grandfather of Drew, was born in Eureka, CA in 1867 shortly after his parents, Andrew and Emeline, arrived from New Brunswick, Canada. It was a long and arduous journey that took them around the stormy Cape Horn. E.C. Clendenen used to say, "I came around the Horn, and I was born in Eureka."

Ernest, and his wife, May, bought the land that is the orchard today, in 1908 from E.F. Johnston of Oregon. Among the varieties of apple trees on the property dating back to 1869 were Minkler, Smith's Cider and Stark – that are still producing apples today. "We use all three in the cider at different times," Clif said. "The old varieties are blended with other varieties for great flavor."

When E. C. bought the producing apple orchard, he first packed and shipped apples in wooden boxes that were sold on the San Francisco wholesale market. In 1909 this was an overnight horse-and-cart trip to the docks in Eureka from Fortuna! From the Eureka docks the apple boxes were loaded onto a steamship for the voyage to San Francisco. Word was sent back from San Francisco that one of his shipments had spoiled, and that he wouldn't be paid for his apples. Wanting to see for himself, E.C. boarded the next steamship, and upon his arrival in S.F., found his apples in perfect condition in the unscrupulous dealer's warehouse. The old dairy barn across the street from the orchard soon had a small cider press, and the Clendenen's started pressing and selling fresh apple cider.

MOUNT GILEAD CIDER AND FRUIT PRESS.

After struggling with a manual basket-type press for a few years, Ernest purchased the Mount Gilead No. 4-C Hydraulic Cider and Fruit Press in 1916, a room-sized machine that was shipped from Mt. Gilead, Ohio. Powered by an electric motor, it was capable of producing 100 gallons per hour, allowing uninterrupted pressing while the next batch was prepared.

CIDER FACT

During Prohibition, the cider press ran nearly every day during the apple season. Apples from numerous local orchards were harvested and brought to Clendenen Cider Works for processing to supply the demand for a fermentable juice.

ANDREW CLENDENEN

Less than a year after E. C. and May purchased the land, in January of 1909, May gave birth to their son Andrew in the house that is still being used by the family today.

Andy Clendenen rejoined his father in the family business in 1948, after delivering fuel for Shell Oil Company, and serving in the South Pacific during WW II. In 1960 he moved the business across the street and into a new 1,800 square foot building. It was constructed by the Fortuna firm of T & H Construction and cost $3,829, not including plumbing, electrical or painting. The quality of construction and choice of materials has allowed the building to withstand several major earthquakes over the past forty years.

CLIF AND DREW CLENDENEN

Like his father, Andy, Clif took to the business at a young age. Today, Clif and his son Drew are picking apples, pressing, which happens roughly every five days, and welcoming visitors to sample a drink that varies in taste as different varieties become ripe. Clif and Drew blend varieties and each pressing has its own unique taste and texture.
